NEW DOCTORS - Dr. Ash Jaffer, Didsbury Medical Clinic, will be welcoming two new physicians to his clinic later this year. The doctors are a married couple who were both trained in South Africa. Carla Victor/Didsbury Review

Didsbury gets two new physicians

Husband and wife team to help ease doctor shortage

BY JODI STYNER
Didsbury Review

Two new physicians will soon be joining Dr. Ash Jaffer at the Didsbury Medical Clinic, filling a long-time need for more doctors in town.

Dr. N. Maiter and Dr. R. Kagee, a South African trained husband and wife team, are a welcome addition to Didsbury.

"It's wonderful," said Dr. Jaffer, who is currently the sole physician at the clinic.

"We're obviously in great need of more doctors to support a growing community."

Dr. Maiter is expected to start taking appointments in the fall and her husband will join her by the end of the year.

Jaffer had anticipated the couple would begin sooner, but said paperwork problems with the CHR have delayed them.

So local residents who have already been calling the clinic to book appointments, will need to be patient for just a little bit longer.

Rose Balcom, a Didsbury resident who suffers from numerous health problems, said she hopes the new addition will relieve some of the pressure on local health care.

"It just can't come soon enough," she said.

Balcom said the current care available is "atrocious" and that she was concerned that her health and that of other Didsbury residents might be at risk.

She has had to seek medical help outside of Didsbury and blames a doctor shortage for the problem.

"We need to continue to recruit more, if we want to be a full-service community."

ROY BROWN
Town of Didsbury CAO

"The doctor situation has been, for me, a horrible hindrance in health care."

While Drs. Maiter and Kagee will offer much-needed relief, Town

CAO Roy Brown said there's still more work to be done.

"We were definitely short and we're still short," he said.

"We still need two more doctors in my opinion. We need to continue to recruit more, if we want to be a full-service community."

The Town has been working with Dr. Jaffer to support his efforts to recruit more doctors and will continue to do so.

"We're also working with the Calgary Health Region to emphasize to them how important it is for us to have more doctors in the community," said Brown.

Alberta's booming economy and growing population have resulted in a serious health-care crunch, creating a province-wide need for more doctors, so for Didsbury to obtain two is good news.

It is estimated that an influx of as many as 35,000 nurses, doctors, and health-care aides will be needed over the next 10 years to meet Alberta's growing demand.

Recruiting from other countries isn't a new concept, especially from South Africa.

In 2004, 22 per cent of licensed physicians in Canada were foreign trained.

But it has become a more popular option now than ever before.

Dr. Maiter actually grew up in the Toronto area before doing her post-secondary studies in South Africa, so she'll be making a return home in a sense.

Dr. Jaffer will inform Didsbury residents when she's ready to take patients in the fall.

Alberta's birds monitored for avian flu

Summer migration patterns being watched closely

BY JODI STYNER
Didsbury Review

Albertans are being asked to keep an eye out for unusual bird deaths this summer as a part of a new program to monitor avian influenza.

Central and Northern Alberta are of particular interest, as they are ideal nesting grounds for many migratory birds who may have used Arctic breeding grounds and come into contact with birds migrating from Asia, where the deadly H5N1 strain is believed to have originated.

"(Alberta) is a very productive habitat for them in the summer," said Dave Ealey, spokesperson for Alberta Sustainable Resource Development.

"Collecting dead birds just made sense from an Alberta perspective."

The program is a part of a national survey, but other areas of the country are focusing more on monitoring the migratory paths of live birds, while Alberta will focus on testing dead birds.

Waterfowl and Shorebirds – including ducks, geese, swans, plovers, sandpipers, and phalaropes – tend to be most vulnerable to the virus.

"We're talking about birds migrating along the Arctic coast and Arctic islands," said Ealey.

"They go a long way north."

Anyone who comes upon a dead bird is asked to bring it in to the nearest Fish and Wildlife office within 24-hours or freeze it until it can

Carla Victor/Didsbury Review

BIRD WATCHING – Canadian geese are particularly vulnerable to viruses like the avian flu and Alberta is an ideal climate for them in the summer. The public is being asked to assist in a new avian flu monitoring program.

be transported.

"Otherwise, they start to decompose and people don't want to have to deal with that," said Ealey.

"And it's no problem if it's frozen for us to do our testing."

Alberta Sustainable Resource staff from 60 districts will be on the lookout as well as a regular course of their job, doing enforcement around bodies of water.

The public, particularly in more rural areas, are asked to assist them, but are being cautioned to take necessary precautions when handling dead birds.

Wear disposable gloves, place a plastic bag over your hand, or use a stick to move the bird into a box, container, or double plastic bags so your skin doesn't come into contact with the animal.

Ealey said the program isn't meant to scare people, but to give them answers.

The H5N1 virus is no longer contained within Southeast Asia because birds can travel quite a distance, and with a recent case of seven members of an Indonesian family succumbing to the virus, it is possible that it has mutated and may spread through human-to-human contact.

"The thing about this public effort is that people have been asking 'is the government doing anything about this?,' he said.

"Yes we are, but we don't expect a lot of occurrences, we just want to be diligent."

Cheryl Nikonchuk, Alberta Fish and Wildlife, said she hasn't seen a lot of activity yet, but that individual offices will collect the birds to be sent to Calgary for lab testing.

"We've received some birds to be tested for West Nile and a few other things, but none for avian flu yet," she said.

Ealey said a dead bird shouldn't automatically send up a red flag, but a better safe than sorry approach is best.

"There are other things birds may die of as well, but if there are no obvious reasons for their death, we want these collected as much as possible," he said.

"We want to have a process in place to test the best we can."

Right now we're in the early stages of the migratory timeline, but later in the summer and into fall, it will be in full effect.

To find out where your nearest Fish and Wildlife office is located, call 310-0000, and for more information on avian influenza in wild birds, visit the Web site www.srd.gov.ab.ca/fw/diseases.

Two Carstairs men trying to flee Lebanon

BY SHAWNE MOHL
for the Didsbury Review

Two Carstairs men are trying to flee war-torn Beirut this week as tension mounts between Israel and Lebanon.

Nadin Kamaledine and his son Rob went to Lebanon in May to help tend to Nadin's brother whose health is failing. They were scheduled to return July 21, but due to the recent airport bombing in Beirut, and other war activity, they have been unable to get out.

Nadin runs the Burger Baron restaurant in Carstairs, well-known for the best burgers in town, with his wife Ihsan and five children.

Zouhier, one of Nadin's other sons, who stayed home in Carstairs to assist his family with the business, says every day they attempt to make contact with their father and brother, but in the past week they've had difficulties getting through.

He says the family is feeling very apprehensive and just wants to see them get home safely, as quickly as possible.

"It's more nerves right now," said Zouhier. "Every day we try to phone."

It was actually a phone call to his father in Lebanon that made him aware that the war activity had started. He called at about 9 p.m. Alberta time, which woke his father up at about 6 a.m. their time.

Shawne Mohl/Didsbury Review

Ihsan Kamaledine (pictured with her children Reama and Zouhier) is anticipating the return of her husband Nadin and son Rob from Lebanon where they have been trapped in the war zone.

As soon as it was made available, Zouhier registered his father and brother on the evacuation list so that they could be transported out of Lebanon by boat to Turkey, and later airlifted back to Canada.

They are currently staying in a small town about 30 minutes from Beirut, and day and night they hear things most could only imagine.

"They hear the bombing and the explosions," said Zouhier.

He is hoping to receive an update from the men soon, but communication by both telephone and email have been problematic.

"It's difficult because there are times there is no power, or you can't get through by phone either," he said.

Both Nadin and his wife were born in Lebanon, but have lived in Canada since 1976 and started operating Burger Baron in 1988.

Ironically, the Kamaledines fled Lebanon in the late 70s to get away from war activity that was breaking out, and now the family is being put through many of the same stresses they experienced before.

The family is very concerned about Nadin and Rob, but cross their hearts every time they turn on the news because they know many, many people who are in the area.

Some of their family members still reside in Lebanon, which just adds to the stress that they are currently faced with, all the while still trying to run a busy restaurant.

"I have quite a few cousins that are from Edmonton who are over there right now," said Zouhier. "We know a lot of people."

Zouhier credited the Canadian government for its quick response in helping out those trying to flee the country to safety.

"We feel that they have done an awesome job," he said.

Justice chair calls for curfew

Town says it's an option, but isn't committing to anything just yet

BY JODI STYNER
Didsbury Review

A Didsbury Youth Justice committee member is advocating for a curfew since seeing an increasing number of criminal incidents occurring in the early morning hours.

Didsbury Youth Justice chair Gord Fulton says more and more of the cases coming before the committee recently have involved incidents occurring between 1 and 3 a.m.

He thinks a curfew might be a deterrent.

Right now, Fulton is working on renovations to his building and he's seen firsthand how much action happens on the streets late at night.

He said people might be surprised to know it's not 15 or 16-year-olds he sees out late, but kids as young as 12 or 13.

While they may not always be looking to cause trouble, he thinks they're far too young to be out that late.

"It's sick," he said.

"I see more action in the downtown streets by the young than there is during the day. What are they doing?"

Town council has discussed the issue with police and a curfew is one option they are looking into, but they have no plans as of yet to implement one.

Didsbury RCMP Sgt. Kevin O'Dwyer said a curfew would only work with "parent buy-in" and that fines would have to be considered as an incentive to keep kids at home.

Otherwise, he said, it would become a game and police would be chasing kids all over town.

Fulton agreed.

"It wouldn't take long until people noticed fines," he said, adding that some parents are giving their kids too many rights. "Hit them in the pocketbook and it'll make a difference."

If by law they would bring in a curfew bylaw, he town does to see a special program devoted to it so police aren't overloaded.

By further utilizing auxiliary officers or members of Citizens on Patrol, he said it would make enforcement easier.

"There needs to be a program in place for this to work," he said.

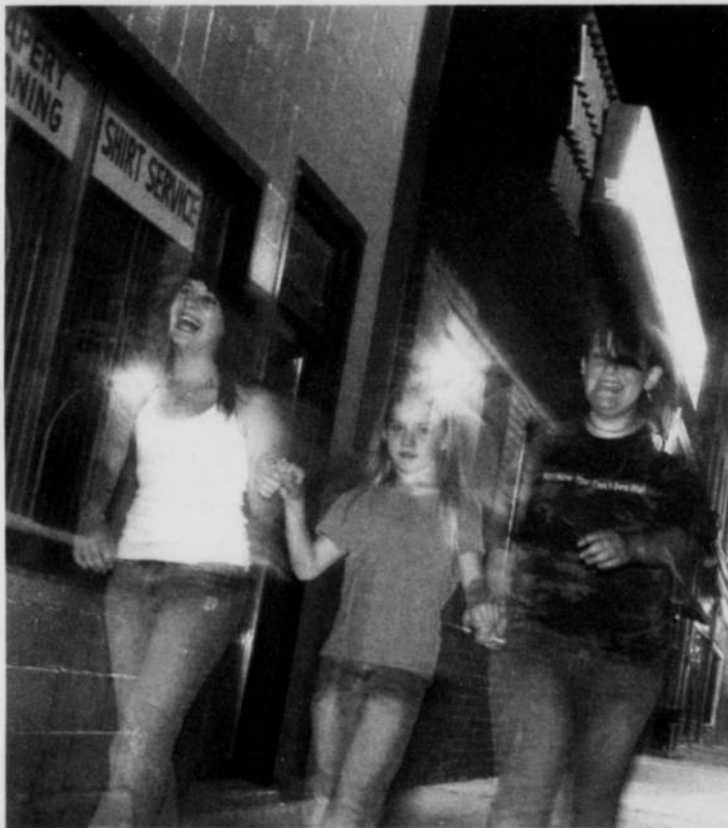

"The RCMP cover such a wide area as it is and they can't be everywhere all the time."

As for teens who might argue that a curfew isn't necessary, he said those getting in trouble are "screwing this up for themselves," and everyone else.

And when they commit acts of vandalism they're "destroying their own future."

Fulton will retire as Youth Justice Chair this year after 10 years on the committee.

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Doctor, doctor

Didsbury received welcome news last week with the announcement of two new doctors joining the Medical Clinic this fall.

The general feeling around town is that it has been a long time coming, and the clinic has been getting lots of calls from eager residents looking to book appointments.

Paperwork issues have pushed back the doctors' intended start-dates, creating some frustration, but just knowing they're on the way is encouraging for residents and Dr. Jaffer, who have all been feeling the crunch.

Even with the two new additions, the squeeze will continue to be felt by health-care workers in Didsbury, and Town CAO Roy Brown said at least two more are needed to relieve it.

And the problem is uniform in communities across the province.

Nurses and doctors are working more and longer shifts, health regions are projecting shortfalls in the tens of millions of dollars, and the population continues to grow, expanding the need for more and better health services.

Overworked doctors and nurses are spinning in circles trying to keep up and are likely getting fed up in the process.

I was beginning to worry that with all this running around, bedside manner might fall to the wayside, not because they don't care, but because they don't have time to care.

But my worries were assuaged Sunday when I visited a newborn baby in the ICU of the Stollery Children's Hospital in Edmonton.

All of the staff went out of their way to make sure the parents were in the loop the entire time.

As they weaved around bodies and equipment, pushing buttons and adjusting tubes, they explained everything and were always friendly.

Within hours, both mom and dad were well-versed in the baby's condition and could repeat, in detail, all the technical terminology involved.

Despite the obvious rush about the place, the staff made a real effort to provide the best possible care and to new parents with a vulnerable little girl, it means everything to know their baby is in good hands.

I just hope a couple of years down the road, that same care will be there.

With a surplus like the one Alberta is enjoying, you'd think we wouldn't have to wait and wonder.

PONDERINGS OF THE HEART

Sharing our faith

MARGARET FRADLEY
for the Didsbury Review

Visiting Switzerland some years ago, my elderly aunt was diagnosed with incurable cancer and was immediately hospitalized.

On one of my many visits to her, I asked her if she had found her peace with God, and if she knew the Lord. She responded eagerly and in no uncertain terms "we do not talk about or share our faith, that is a very private and personal thing and we just try to live it out."

I shared that in shutting out others, we often miss the beautiful and meaningful kind of fellowship we can enjoy with one another.

I know that my aged aunt was strengthened by these times, and I myself need others with whom I can share my faith, and at times my lack thereof, needing both to be nurtured by others and hopefully being able to nurture others.

However, I am also reminded that as the saying goes, "I would rather see a sermon than hear one any day," and I realize that many that have a vitally strong faith prefer to keep it personal.

I know such people and I have the utmost respect for them. Isn't it a blessing we are all different?

AT THE KITCHEN TABLE

BY NOREEN OLSON
for the Didsbury Review

When I wrote my last column we were on the brink of going to our grandson's Nursery School so that a reluctant Grandpa could talk about farm animals.

Even Grandpa had to admit that it was a good day. The traffic was not nearly as bad as we expected, and Kirsten drove between her house and the school so we didn't have to search out an unfamiliar address.

The kids were sweet and well-mannered, one of the teachers was farm raised and could ask intelligent questions and Jonas was very pleased to have his Grandpa as a guest.

Jonas brought his loader tractor so that he could show the other kids how bales are hauled to the cows and the class had baskets of plastic animals all of whom were eagerly waiting to be fed. I noticed a couple of giraffes and hippos in the herd but we didn't dwell on the technicalities.

Several of the kids told us about their pets and thank goodness no one asked what happens to the cute baby calves when they grow up. Actually Ralph did so well I think he may have missed his calling. Maybe he should have been a Nursery School teacher.

The wedding season is in full swing and I have been quite busy. Soon after the Nursery School experience a very nice boy whom we know, was being married in the Kananaskis and asked that I perform the ceremony and that Ralph and I stay for the dinner. The wedding was at 3 p.m. and we had a lovely drive, a beautiful wedding on a promontory overlooking the golf course, a nice visit with both sides of the family and an elegant dinner.

An altogether lovely day. A few days after that another lovely young man, whose family we have known for generations, was being married at the David Thompson Resort west of Nordegg. Again I was asked to perform the ceremony and Ralph and I were asked to stay for dinner.

This wedding too was to be outside at a viewpoint overlooking a scenic valley. Lots of similarities in the two events and I think this is where the trouble began.

How long does it take to drive to the David Thompson Resort? "The wedding is at 3 o'clock", I said for the tenth time, "so five hours will allow us plenty of time to enjoy the drive, stop and stretch if need be and have a bite of lunch in Rocky Mountain House."

"The countryside is absolutely gorgeous, so green and so lush, the weather is perfect, we can have a lovely leisurely trip." We were in Rocky Mountain House just after 12:00 noon and stopped for lunch.

As we strolled back to the car I said, "I am going to get the invitation and map out so that we know exactly where we are going when we get to the resort". It was now twelve minutes before 1 p.m. I opened the invitation and stifled a scream. "Dear Heaven Ralph, it says that the resort is 140 km west of Rocky and the wedding is at 2 o'clock, not 3 o'clock."

"Is there any hope?" "There is always hope," he said, with what I thought was remarkable calm.

Getting ourselves killed would have really messed up the wedding so we did not pass on solid lines and we slowed a bit for really tight curves.

The road was good and the traffic was light but it was not the lovely scenic drive we had planned, it was more a teeth clenching, gut-wrenching, head-long plunge into the wilderness. We drove through the park gates at 2:02 and I was out of the car and into the office before the wheels stopped turning, there were other people in the office but I was past good manners, "excuse me," I yelled, "I am a marriage commissioner and I have a wedding here like two minutes ago, can you help me get to the chapel?"

The desk clerk leapt to attention, she punched a number into her walkie-talkie, a golf cart and driver appeared at the door, Ralph handed me my briefcase through the car window and we were off up the trail.

The groom admitted that he was beginning to get a little nervous but otherwise everyone was quite happy and cheerful, the bride was fashionably late and after my heart slowed down to 160 beats per minute I was fine too. It was a lovely wedding, lots of old friends we had not seen in years and now Ralph has one more profession he is qualified for.

Maybe he could have been a part-time nursery school teacher / race car driver.

Heroes program gets a boost

A generous donation from the Household Goods Thrift Store has ensured the Heroes program will be offered again next year to the Grade 7 class at Westglen school.

This week, Ev Peters and Sylvia Derksen presented a cheque in the amount of $3,275 to Heroes instructors Alison Lefebvre and Kim Kerr.

The program was implemented for the first time this year to the four Grade 7 classes at Westglen.

The thrift store allows Westglen to cover outstanding costs as well as the costs of next year's program.

Heroes focuses on personal character development by building on an individual's gifts and abilities. According to the student manual, "a hero is someone who uses their gifts and abilities to make a positive change in themselves and others."

The program emphasizes problem solving skills and critical thinking and educates youth to become content, confident, caring and effective role models.

It helps them understand that they can choose to overcome obstacles and accomplish all they are capable of.

During the program the students also examine the power of respect, encouragement, and of giving back to society.

A Grade 8 followup program is being developed for the students who took part in Heroes this year.

The aim of this followup program will be to further build on what the students have already learned and provide opportunities for practical applications.

Working through the Heroes program with the Westglen Grade 7 students revealed a depth of insight and a genuine desire from the students to have a positive impact on their world.

The instructors felt it was a privilege to have an opportunity to work with such tremendous individuals.

Thanks go out to the Household Goods Thrift Store and all the people who volunteer to make donations like this possible.

AAAAHHHHHHH - If horses could smile... RCMP Const. Terry Lyall of Nain, Labrador, gives Shadow, a Hanovarian-Thoroughbred cross, a cool shower after a perfect evening performance of the RCMP Musical Ride in Olds, Saturday. Scorching temperatures during the show reached the low 30's making this cool shower most appreciated by both rider and horse.

Didsbury athletes make Summer Games roster

BY JODI STYNER
Didsbury Review

Fifteen Didsbury athletes will join 3,000 others from across the province in a show of skills at the 2006 Alberta Summer Games in Red Deer this week.

Our athletes make up the bulk of the Field Hockey roster, with 11 of the 13 players and all three coaches hailing from Didsbury.

Just three years ago, many of these girls may have never heard of the sport, but thanks to DHS coach Jenni Johnston, they've had a unique opportunity to try, and succeed, at it.

MORGAINE JOHNSON

field hockey coach

Former DHS player Sarah Kemmere will co-coach the team in Red Deer.

She participated in the Games two years ago and she's eager to return as a coach this year.

"It's a blast," she said of her first experience.

"You really get to indulge in the sport and get more experience."

She hopes the team will come out in the lead, but even if they don't, she knows they'll take a lot away from the competition.

Along with the field hockey players, two swimmers, one in-line hockey player and one soccer alternate will also make the journey north.

"I hope I do good, but I don't really care," said Morgaine Johnson, 13, who will compete in four swimming events.

"I just want to see what it's like." Johnson is an all-around athlete, competing in various sports, but she said swimming is her favourite because you don't get any help from anyone but yourself.

Her hard work earned her Westglens' coveted 2005-06 Female Athlete of the Year award.

The Summer Games will kick off Thursday with the opening ceremonies and close Monday when the top contenders vvy for gold.

Win or lose, a major highlight for all of the participants will be to stay in the Athlete's Village where they'll get a chance to meet athletes from all over the province.

Participating Didsbury athletes are as follows:

FIELD HOCKEY:
Jacqueline Baril
Suzanne Baril
Brianna Byiers
Amber Collinge
Kayla Edwards
Jessie Flynn
Dayna Hadway
Dayle Kimmel
Chelsea Overwater
Brittany Schumaker
Alyssa Smith

175 MEMORIAL

GEBERS
In Loving Memory of Our Dad Ken. Who passed away July 31, 1999. "So many things have happened Dad. In the seven years since you were called away. So many things we could have shared. Had you been here today? A million times we've needed you. A million times we've cried. If love could have saved you, You never would have died. Dad, if we could have one lifetime wish, One wish that would come true, We'd wish today with all our hearts, For yesterday and you. But since we know this can not come true, We'll do the next best thing. We'll simply spend the day with you, just remembering." Loving you forever your sons, Kyle & Justin.

230 THANK YOU

Thank You
The family of the late Anne Baptist of Didsbury would like to take the time to give thanks to some special people that made her passing a little bit easier to bear. The staff on Unit 4, for their tender words and kindness. The volunteers that sat with her week after week without fail. We would like to thank Rev. Richard Pahl for officiating the service. Organist Doreen McEwen for playing the hymns. A special thank you to a friend of the family, Jane Wood, for singing, you touched all our hearts. The ladies of the Zion Evangelical Missionary Church for providing and serving the refreshments. For all the cards, flowers and food brought to the house and for the donations given to the Rosebud Foundation. Didsbury Alberta Health Services Unit 4. Each and everyone of you has touched our life in a special way. Thank you again. Stan Baptist and his family
